I live and work in the District of Columbia. As a resident, I encourage DCRA to provide as much support as possible to the wonderful food truck businesses that have made lunchtime in DC such a culinary adventure. My office is close to Franklin Square and Metro Center. The trucks serving lunch in this part of the city make the area lively and interesting. I have never found their presence to be an inconvenience or a nuisance.

Although I still patronize local restaurants and cafes, the food trucks have become a wonderful destination and a great addition to the dining option in our city.

I encourage you to listen closely to the truck operators, who have independently created a workable and viable system of operating that should not require a whole lot of tweaking or regulating. If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

Very truly yours,
