The new proposed laws for food trucks are too stringent and stomp out business competition. These rules should be reconsidered and fair rules should be administered. Food trucks should be able to operate like any other business in the city. There should not be any time restrictions on when they can serve food. If there is an open parking spot then they should be able to vend as long as they are paying for parking. I have one word of advice to the lobbying restaurant owners who do not like competition. If you're losing much business to a mobile food truck, you should figure out what you're doing wrong. Food trucks provide a great variety of food options to tourist and residence. Make it easier for these guys to run their businesses.
